Philosopher in Action

Edmond Cahn, before his untimely death in 1964, had completed three books — The Sense of Injustice, The Moral Decision and The Predicament of Democratic Man. These books are the product of a mind and heart molded by twenty-three years of active law practice, almost two decades of teaching and a lifetime of thought and scholarship. Translated into many languages, they have influenced men and women throughout the world.

Meyer Levin recalls of Edmond Cahn's visit to Israel: "He almost single-handedly, by virtue of a few lectures and through the correspondence with Ben-Gurion included in this volume, prevented the passage of a libel law in a form that would have stifled the press. This was a philosopher in action, a man whose universal human concern was bound in with a traditionally sacred view of justice."

Relevant to the Crucial Issues of Our Day

"Today's jurisprudential philosophy owes much to Edmond Cahn's inspired contributions. Confronting Injustice collects the brilliant arguments that have given such powerful support to the modern perspective of law that cherishes human dignity as its supreme value. I regard it as must reading."

William J. Brennan, Jr.
Associate Justice, U.S. Supreme Court

"... worthy of his other works which have so deeply influenced American thought... Its influence will reach out to all those concerned with the future of our country. Its message is timeless, but happens to be particularly timely in our age."

Louis Finkelstein
Chancellor, Jewish Theological Seminary

"I have known in my life few more eloquent spokesmen for the highest ideas of justice under law than Edmond Cahn. This volume of his writings will live as a passionate reminder to all of us of a high and practical ideal—for his vision of equal justice for all peoples is one which we can ignore in practice only at the risk of our own freedom."

Arthur J. Goldberg
U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations

"We should be sad that this sensitive man never wrote more... We should be glad that he wrote as much as he did, and that so much of it is drawn together in this volume. Cahn... has left behind, in this fine book, his numerous carefully contemplated exhortations to action against injustice."

Passionately Felt

"Edmond Cahn's sensitivity to injustice was passionately felt and ardently voiced. These essays breathe the spirit of law in the service of man's better, more compassionate nature."

Paul A. Freund
Professor, Harvard University Law School

"Injustice is too deeply implanted in mankind to be susceptible of elimination, but without being confronted it could not even be recognized, and apart from the great founders of religions it would be hard to name any person who stands higher than Edmond Cahn in the confrontation."

Irving Brant
Historian

"Cahn's mind was sharp, subtle and complex; his spirit was tense and passionate. Like the Hebrew prophets... Cahn never for a moment lost sight of the moral question, of the moral dimension of thought, action and law... It ate its way into all his thoughts and ideals."

Milton R. Konvitz
New York Times Book Review

"It is a book not only for lawyers and philosophers but for anyone who wants to understand the social and moral issues that arise every day in the functioning of our legal and political institutions."

Harry W. Jones
Professor, Columbia University School of Law
